LOCAL CUSTOMS AND CULTURE

The culture in Singapore is defined by the different ethnic groups in the city-state.

Chinese, Malay, Indian, and Western influences are all palpable there, making for a mix of traditions and local customs. This diversity of the culture in Singapore is also reflected in the many languages spoken here, including English, Mandarin, Malay, and Tamil.

Culture in Singapore is largely defined by peace, justice, and social and religious harmony. The saying that Singapore is a “fine” city, not only refers to its cleanliness or its quality of life. In fact, to ensure safety and order in the state, the government has prohibited various things. If you don’t want to pay a heavy fine or even spend time in jail, you should avoid the following:

- chewing gum
- spitting
- littering
- smoking indoors
- jay walking
- drinking and driving
